An excerpt from DARE:

Dixon wanted to cover her mouth. He wanted to tell her to be quiet, grab her, and then run. He couldn't; he couldn't move. Something was keeping him in place; something was causing his legs to feel like lead, his eyes to swell with tears, and his back to feel as if someone had poured a bucket of ice water down it.

Dixon turned toward Lexi. Her face had gone ghost white and her breathing was labored. He finally found the strength to use his voice.

"We need to get out of here." He was whispering, but knew Lexi could hear him because she was nodding. "Slowly and quietly—"

"They've seen us; they're coming!" Lexi screamed. Dixon turned his head from Lexi to the window. The two brothers were closing in on the front door. Dixon stole a quick glance at the coffee table. The kitchen knife was gone.
